

Baby Duck Syndrome in UX

Users hate changes. It might be explained by the baby duck syndrome - the tendency of a user to compare each new computer system to that which they originally learned. If a new system or UI is not familiar, the user will likely perceive it negatively. This can be compared to newly hatched ducks or other birds who get attached to the first creature they see in their life and consider it their mom.

